CHANGING OF THE GUARD

MORGAN BEATTY: "Next, the changing of the cloak and dagger guard. Here is Richard Harkness in Washington."

HARKNESS: "The President selected two men strikingly alike. Each is in late middle age, and Republican. Each would pass for a tweedy college professor, and each man has a warm, benign smile, in contrast to this covert business of cloaks and daggers."

"Before joining the Eisenhower administration, McCone bossed a Los Angeles ship building firm. As Atomic Energy chief he directed facilities worth seven billion dollars, and employed 100,000 people. Now Dulles is rounding out 20 years in Intelligence. In World War II he first reported the Nazis V-2 rocket laboratories, which the allies then bombed. As head of the CIA, he engineered the coup against old Mossadegh in Iran. The overthrow of the communist regime in Guatemala. It can be argued that the U-2 flights were a net plus for our national security. And then with the Cuban failure, Dulles voiced to a group of friends a philosophy his successor may come to adopt. In this business, he said, your mistakes are publicized, and you cannot boast of your successes. Richard Harkness, NBC News, Washington."
